

Stainless Steel Cutlery—Care and Selection

Steel is an alloy of Iron and Carbon. To provide resistance to corrosion, Chromium and Nickel are added to make Stainless Steel. The percentage of alloys added is reflected in their definitions: 18/10 = 18% Chrome/10% Nickel—this mix provides the best quality commercial stainless steel cutlery. 18/10 is actually softer than 18/0 (18% chrome, 0% nickel), so knife blades are made of the harder 18/0 to enable the edge to be kept sharp. Due to this fact, the knife blade needs the most care, as it lacks the Nickel protection.

Prolonged exposure to food acids, chloride (e.g., mustard, salt, eggs, jam) and moisture can cause pitting and staining. Rinsing for a few minutes in warm water will help to remove heavy soil build up, but prolonged soaking, and leaving cutlery in the dishwasher damp for lengthy periods should be avoided, as the resistance to corrosion is reduced while cutlery is wet. Cutlery should be removed, dried and stored in dry conditions as soon as possible.

A mild abrasive or metal polish will remove discolourations, and water stains can be removed by applying alcohol or salad oil. To keep the shine on cutlery, use a sponge with white vinegar.

INTRODUCING PVD COATED CUTLERY

PVD (Physical Vapour Deposition), an eco-friendly vacuum coating process that is widely applied on various products such as jewellery, door hardware, car accessories and marine fittings.

PVD is resistant to chipping, fading, corrosion or tarnishing and most importantly, is food safe. Coating properties (such as hardness, structure, chemical and temperature resistance, and adhesion) can be precisely controlled.

Sola's PVD has a 2-year warranty on manufacturing defects, such as peeling or delaminating (excludes scratches). Knives are recommended to be washed separately from forks and spoons to avoid scratches. Also PVD cutlery needs to be completely dry before storing, to avoid lengthy periods of water residue mixed with chlorine or other detergents.

*Terms and conditions apply concerning minimum order values and lead times.
Product delivery is estimated 6–10 weeks from date of order.*
